

I await the dimming of the light

I bathe my eyes in the starry pool above
And know that in my soul
I too bear
Innumerable stars and galaxies
Wonders of the dark.

But these I cannot see
No, because the sun within me burns too bright.
So I await the fading of the day
Wait for the horizon to close its lid on me
Await night and pain and the dimming of the light
Wait for the skies to darken
And for the stars within me to light up
These stars of mine
Stars that I have yet to see.
